Participating in the University of Alaska SE Outdoor Leadership Program involves strenuous activities such as hiking, climbing, skiing, and kayaking. Courses often take place in remote areas where the emergency medical support generally found in urban areas is not available. As well, courses will often require students to stay in wilderness areas for multiple days. Signing this form certifies that you have reviewed the student's medical history with him or her and have completed a physical examination of the student. Further, signing this form certifies that the physical exam and review of the student's medical history revealed no condition that would make participating in activities such as those described above unreasonably dangerous for the student.
